While shopping online is a convenience for some items, shopping for other items such as shoes or clothes is a personal preference. Many prefer to try on a piece of clothing or pair of shoes before making the purchase. Yet, others are comfortable shopping at online shoe stores because they already know what they want.

By in large, online shoe stores have been reporting increased sales the last few years. How is this so, considering that a buyer cannot try the shoes on? There are other advantages to buying at online shoe stores.

Two big advantages are style and selection. Many department stores simply cannot match the style and color selections of the online retailers. They are limited in storage space and in display area.

Online shoe stores can display their selection and it can be endless—as many web pages as they want to put up. There are some kinds of shoes that are specially made and while shopping in a department store for that shoe might be a gamble, online shoe stores can offer you delivery of virtually any type of shoe within a few days.

Size is also an important factor. Some customers might need a shoe that is not standard width or size. Online shoe stores' greatest feature is the wide and virtually endless collection of standard shoes and unique selections not usually found in brick stores.

Accessibility and convenience are also distinct benefits. Online shoe stores are available twenty-four hours a day instead of typical store hours. You can shop at anytime and from the comfort of your own home.

In terms of questions or specifics, while a shoe salesperson might be knowledgeable (and hopefully enthusiastic), a company's online information about shoes is always straight to the point, accurate and well written.

Despite all of these advantages, however, many still have problems with the idea of online shoe stores. Online shoe stores work best for somebody who knows just what he or she is looking for. If you are unsure about your shoe size, width or what feels comfortable then an online product may be a risk. While some online shoe stores offer refunds, it is still more of a hassle to return an item and get a credit back, than it is to simply walk inside a shoe store and decide if the shoe fits.

And of course, sometimes you just don't want to wait and want your new shoes now! That will always be a con of online shoe stores when compared to a store you can walk in and out of in less than 20 minutes. Online shoe stores usually ship items within a week.

Whatever your footwear needs, there is a store to accommodate you. It might be right across the street or somewhere in cyberspace.
